

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An apparatus suitable for holding a photomask comprises a photomask holder having a plurality of through holes and a plurality of protrusions detachably connected to the photomask holder via the through holes. The photomask is positioned on supporting ridges of the protrusions so that the friction between the protrusions and the photomask is prevented, and the generation of particulates can be effectively reduced.